96.4 Draft Costs of Doing Business in Ireland 2019

- Manus O Donnell presented the draft Costs of Doing Business report, which had been circulated to Members in advance of the meeting.
- The report benchmarks Ireland’s cost competitiveness relative to competitor countries (such as the UK, the OECD, and the Euro Area).
- The key findings of the report presented were:
  - Ireland is a high cost jurisdiction, but that prices (on average) are rising slowly;
  - Eurostat labour cost data for 2018 is due to be published in late March and will be important to update the charts with this data – quarterly data shows labour costs rising faster than previous years;
  - Tax rates in Ireland are relatively competitive for people earning the average income, but high earners face much higher average tax rates;
  - Commercial property costs remain elevated in Ireland, and continue to increase nationally (though there is a large regional difference);

Members and Advisors to forward further observations by March 15.

Secretariat to take observations on board comments in the final report.

Secretariat targeting publication in early April. Exact timing will be determined following Cabinet approval and may be impacted by Brexit.
The cost of credit in Ireland is significantly higher than the cost of credit in the euro area;

The price of business services in Ireland has been increasing at a faster rate than many EU countries.

- Member comments to be noted in the draft report included:
  - The importance of using up to date data, particularly at a granular level. While appreciating constraints on data, members raised the importance of reflecting hidden costs in the report;
  - The importance of rising labour costs (especially relative to inflation). They noted that this was particularly significant in the construction sector. The challenges of labour shortages, and high costs and low productivity, in the construction sector were highlighted;
  - The issues that using averages can cause the document – particularly around income tax – where there are concerns around the tax rate for above average earners;
  - Hidden costs should feature more prominently in the preface to the document;
  - Their concern with the interest rate differential between Ireland and other Euro Area Members;
  - The impact that rising costs have on start-ups.

- The overall messages that should feature in the Executive Summary and the Chair’s Preface were:
  - Capture the worsening global economic outlook better;
  - Include more about the tax wedge for higher than average earners and link this to internationally mobile talent;
  - Note the particular difficulty that start-ups face in a high cost environment;
  - More on the hidden costs in the economy (like traffic congestion, or the planning regulation)

- The Council were invited to forward written observations as soon as possible.

During the roundtable discussion, the overarching issues discussed were:

- Makeup of the delivery board. Currently, there is only one member from private sector.
- The pro-cyclical nature of the project and potential of overheating of the economy
- Low productivity and skills shortage in construction sector.
- Public sector capacity to deliver, evaluate and appraise the projects.

Fionn Jenkinson and David Maloney (DPER) informed the Council on ongoing research on construction sector regarding the capacity and skill shortages.

The Chair concluded by thanking Fionn for the presentation and extended an invitation to Fionn to present in future Council meeting on the subject.
